COMMENT: Thames River remains a jewel, albeit somewhat flawed (May. 9, 2009)

It's impossible to conceive when looking at our river now, so narrow and shallow, that such a calamity that paralysed our city with grief could happen.

Canoe Club falls victim to dam failure (May. 6, 2009)

The London Canoe Club may become the first casualty of city hall's $5-million lawsuit against the designers and builders of the flawed Springbank Dam.

Dam repairs may be years away (May. 5, 2009)

Londoners will forego a working Springbank dam for at least two more years - and potentially far longer - unless the city settles its $5-million lawsuit against firms who designed and built it.

SPECIAL REPORT: Fix it or deep-six it? (Apr. 18, 2009)

With costs of repairing a new but defective Springbank Dam in the millions of dollars and rising, the debate over whether the structure should even exist has resurfaced. Free Press reporter Randy Richmond lays out the positions of the dam's proponents and opponents.

City keeps report secret (Apr. 17, 2009)

City hall won't disclose to taxpayers a report that details what officials think went wrong at Springbank Dam, even though those findings will be shared with engineering firms sued by the city.

Cost to fix dam totals $4.5M (Apr. 16, 2009)

London city hall says $4.5 million needs to be spent to correct defects that disabled one gate at Springbank Dam and also threaten the other three gates.

POV: Step in right direction on Springbank Dam (Apr. 16, 2009)

Given the long, arduous, and recently tortuous history of the Springbank Dam, it's difficult to ignore the possibility nature might be trying to send us all a message, and a not particularly new one at that.

City files $5.5M lawsuit (Apr. 15, 2009)

London is suing the consulting engineers, designers and builders of the broken Springbank Dam for $5.5 million.

Springbank Dam repair stalls as costs overflow (Apr. 14, 2009)

Ten months after the Springbank Dam was supposed to begin operating again, its future remains as muddy as the river flowing through its broken gates.

Canoe club seeks fast fix to stay alive (Apr. 6, 2009)

Worried about another summer without paddling, the London Canoe Club is pitching a novel way to dam the Thames River -- a giant wormlike tube filled with water.

Raw sewage in Thames enough to fill 700 pools (Feb.

Brooke.

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 9

The toy boat on the south branch of the Thames goes over Hunt Dam. This week: Cathy Reeves of the UTRCA talks about the more than 200 barriers found throughout the watershed.

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 10

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 11

The green toy boat floats through London on the south branch of the Thames. This week: landscape architect Ron Koudys.

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 12

The black toy boat makes its way down the north branch of the Thames. This week: London poet and writer Penn Kemp talks about the literary implications of the river.

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 13

The black toy boat approaches the Forks on the north branch of the Thames. This week: engineer Slobodan Simonovic talks about the potential for another massive flood in London.

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 14

The two toy boats meet at the Forks of the Thames. This week: Kevin Bice the London artist who conceived and organized the artbook "The River Project."

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 15

The toy boats float by Greenway Pollution Plant. This week: John Fitzgerald, Division Manager for the City of London's pollution control operations, talks about keeping the Thames clean.

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 16

The toy boats approach faulty Springbank Dam. This week: London Rowing Club President Meredith Smith talks about the problems the dam has created for rowers.

A River: Toy Boat Tour, Part 17

20, 2009)

Enough raw sewage to fill about 700 backyard swimming pools flowed untreated into the Thames River from London during last week's heavy rainfall and flooding.

New army fighting erosion (Dec. 31, 2008)

They look like an end, not a beginning.

A RIVER: Saturday Special (Dec. 13, 2008)

The man who launched the annual cleanup of the Thames River 10 years ago has a new, more ambitious plan to help the waterway.

COLUMN: River roundup (Dec. 13, 2008)

A few patches of ice and snow clung to the trails when I took my first walk in the woods along the Thames River in early March.

POINT OF VIEW: Thames River vision should connect us all (Dec. 13, 2008)

Almost every journey runs into a few unexpected bends and rough patches.

Watershed moment (Dec. 6, 2008)

It has defined Southwestern Ontario from the start, yet the Thames River is remote to the lives of many who live in the region.

Rare mussel found in Thames (Nov. 30, 2008)

It's no longer a has-bean.

COLUMN: Time right to celebrate the Thames (Nov. 29, 2008)

If a city on a hill cannot be hidden, it's equally true that a city in a valley can't easily be seen.

Imagine our Thames clean enough to swim (Nov. 28, 2008)

Swimming in the Thames?

Thames meeting turbulent (Nov. 27, 2008)

The city's hopes of balancing competing interests in the Thames River ran into rough water last night at a key public meeting on a plan for the watershed's future.

Public's turn on Thames' future (Nov. 22, 2008)

Does the river need a few restaurants? How about some washrooms?
